Reviewed by Grace Halsell. In The Forgotten Queens, she writes that universal suffrage "tears away two veils" that give substance to political Islam: the "hijab [veil] of women and the hijab or veil of the caliph." When these "veils" of political Islam are removed, one arrives at "the will of the people," she writes.

The Forgotten Queen of Islam. For instance, the pre-Islamic period would have provided a rich backdrop to Mernissi's discussion here, whether with reference to female (or ungendered) deities of the earlier time, or to the early political histories of North Africa, Arabia, and Yemen. The "little queens of Sheba" here are Fatimids,...
